

K-LOVE is something that I cannot do without. I drive a company vehicle which is only equipped with a radio. This leaves me with little choice as to listening to christian music. My radio station does not change during the day unless I cannot get reception. My job is very stressful. Not only does K-LOVE provide me with a positive and encouraging message, it provides me with a family while I am out on the road. Non-christian radio stations offend me, piss me off, frustrate me, and fill me with negativity. When I say that I cannot get by without K-LOVE, I really mean it.

If K-LOVE were to be displaced by some LPFM broadcaster, it would, without a doubt, have a dramatic adverse affect on my life. I would most likely end up being much less friendly, more prone to anger (and road rage since I work out in the field), and possibly even develop a foul mouth due to the increasing amount of negative influence on most radio stations and in the world in general.

K-LOVE Radio broadcasts are most certainly in the public's best interest. I have never listened to any non-christian station that I could honestly say was positive and encouraging. Plenty of times, I have heard things on public radio that I would not let my kids hear. I have heard things that offend me, things that should offend the majority of people. With K-LOVE, you never have to worry about that.

I have had co-workers admit to me that listening to K-LOVE kept them in a better frame of mind, even if they themselves were not christians and/or just did not like the music. The national broadcast aspect of K-LOVE helps tie us in around the country. I have met people in other towns who listen to K-LOVE and it makes us feel like we already have a common bond, almost like family.

Positive and encouraging. That is K-LOVE's theme. Nothing else could explain it better. If the FCC takes that away from me and others, the void will be filled with negativity.

Positive and encouraging.

Sincerely,
Todd M. Robinson
